"Fall 1908" moves are due 17 June 1971. Underlined moves do not succeed. My thanks to those who have volunteered to play Turkey, but this game is being played under the old LIAISONS DANGEREUSES Houserules, which forbid reviving countries which have gone into civil disorder.

Enter the new game, R-4, for only $4.00 if you are a member of either TDA or IFW. $5.00 if you are not affiliated with these organizations.

R-3

Following the "Spring 1902" moves, the Turkish F Bla retreats to Con; and the German F Nth retreats to Norwegian Sea.

Change of address for Tom Leahey -- 193 North Grand St., West Suffield, Conn., 06093. This should be good through the summer.

Letter to the editor concerning R-3, 1971R:

Buddy Tretick, 10 June 1971:

Although I have no personal objections to Deborah Schleicher playing this game, I have personally found reproussions with the other GM's who finally rate the games. Therefore I must object to such a replacement. With this letter, I am sending names and addresses of some of LA GUERRE's standby players and am requesting Chris to contact a player and delay the game slightly (if necessary) for this purpose (keep in mind the natural delay due to retreat season).

[No list was enclosed with Buddy's letter, but as I said, if any player objected, I would get another substitute. The new player for England is now:

Len Lakofka, 1806 N. Richmond Ave., Chicago, Illinois 60647.

Press:

MARSEILLES: It is hoped that the Kaiser and Pope can work out their difficulties without the use of military might. French troops have been ordered to the Piedmont border.

PARIS: The English have been told repeatedly not to involve themselves in the affairs of Continental Europe!! The invasion of Belgium is an act of war. France as of March 15, 1902 declares WAR ON GREAT BRITAIN.

The deadline for "Fall 1902" moves is now 8 July 1971. Please eend in conditional builds and/pr removals to speed up the game.

PRESS RELEASES -- 1970C

St. Peerigrad, 3 May 1907:

PEERIAN EMPIRE REJOICES, CZAR LIVES!

All the Greater Peerian Empire today rang with the TeDeum sang in churches throughout the land as word spread that His Imperial Majesty, Peerimaximus I had apparently passed the test of survival after last week's narrow escape from an assassination attempt.

What happened has now become clear. The Emperor was driving, alone and unescorted as is his custom, through the royal flower fields near St. Peerigrad de Capistrano, when another vehicle attempted to crash into the royal carriage. Fortunately, the Czar's driving ability is considerable, and he moved to avoid the oncoming cart. As the Czar leaped to safety his carriage and the cart burst into flames. No one has yet been accused of plotting the horrid deed, but rumors are flying that it was the work of Siberian extremists wishing to leave the Empire and join with the Japanese. This tends to be confirmed by the presence of an extremist symbol on the car, the abbreviation D.A.T.S.U.N. on the front of the car. The meaning of the abbreviation is unclear, but some feel it is "Does Anybody Think Siberian Unless Nagata?"

In the meantime, the war in the west goes on. Brave Russian soldiers continue their efforts to repel the invaders of St. Petersburg. Russian forces take more of Germany and move into Italy to aid their valiant Italian allies. The Russian Navy continues to lay siege to Malta, but hold little hope of taking the island in the near future.

Coronado, 1 June 1971:

Headquarters of TTT Publications here today announced that plans to purchase the island by the Peery Empire were scuttled after reports that the US Navy, largest property owner on the island, was planning on towing the entire island far out to sea and using it for torpedo and bombing practice. In the meantime, Peery's Printing Palace (PPP!) has relocated itself on the highest hill in San Diego. From high atop this his Peery gazes down on the greats of San Diego: Mrs. C. Arnholt Smith seated at her Louis XIV desk, Mayor Frank Curran seated in the rear seat of a yellow cab, John Alessio seated on a hot seat at Terminal Island Prison, and Bishop John Patrimonokomus of the Orthodox Church seated on his throne chair....

PRESS RELEASES -- 1970AJ

[From the translations of Patrick Albermarion]

In the Land of Cycls:

"Come to me Moeller -- I bid thee come." The incantation was repeated with precise meter and increasing vigor by Morgath. The Silmaril, however, was very dim, as if the incantation was not finding its source. "Curses -- hasn't Lumberman found him yet? If only Lumberman would return...!" The Silmaril grew brighter for an instant. Morgath mused, then, "Lumberman, come to me!", he shrieked.

On the road to Eyeaff Dubbleue:

Lumberman had seen Leomund arrive at the Inn of the Parting Cow and he was sorely tempted to use the 'Ring of the Sun' upon him. But he knew Leomund was too strong. He slipped away and now was travelling back toward Castle Carn, and eventually Bárad Búchland. First he felt a twitch, then a slamming force hit him and his brain exploded in pain. He fell writhing upon the ground, and then lay silent.

At the Inn of the Farting Cow:

Quickly, Leomund was to horse, leaving his knights openmouthed and clamoring behind. A few leagues down the road he found Lumberman lying unconscious.

As he stooped to gain the ring, a large rock knocked him senseless and he fell across the twitching Lumberman.

Above them a one-armed orc stood, holding his bleeding stump of an arm, and laughing hideously beneath his breath.

Halfflower clove the finger from Lumberman's right hand, and quickly put on the ring. Lumberman quaked and moaned, then grasping his chest, his face grew pale and barren as he died.

"Now Leomund, Now I shall vanquish you!" roared Halfflower.

Throughout the lands of Middle Earth, Rings glowed and flashed!

At the Osgilath Bridge:

"There is only one chance" thought Gyfax. Quickly he drew out Wacker's Seman and found the words of a long-dead tongue.

Miles away Leomund's rings glowed and shown brightly just as Halfflower's blade crashed across the King's neck!
